Mining Legislation.

In one respect the laws of the Austro-Hungarian Empire are well ahead of those of either the United Kingdom or North America. Mining rights, it ap taken from the bonanza mines of Spiced New England, Santa Croix and pears are only granted upon undeniable proofs being forthcoming that the property to be opened up will pay working expenses at least, while all surveys have to be endorsed by officials of the highest reputation. The French mining laws are also far stricter than those in force in England or the United States.
